

is situated at the northwest edge of the lake, between the hillside and the water. When buildings and landscaping are completed, the two main wings of the group will roughly parallel the lakeshore, at a distance of about twenty-five yards. The three other units that the whole plan calls for—a second student studies building, a library, and a small building for offices—will be constructed as rapidly as finances and time permit. The first unit, together with the already existing buildings and some faculty houses to be erected, will provide sufficient space to house the College during 1941-42. As the other units are completed, the College can expand, and will be modestly quartered for a number of years. At a later date it is planned gradually to replace the old buildings (which are being remodelled for present use) by the buildings designed in 1939 by Walter Gropius and Marcel Breuer. This plan for growth avoids waste, since the old buildings will be used as long as it is economical, and all new buildings will fit into a comprehensive building scheme.
